MOOT PROBLEM

1. The Republic of Indravarsha is a sovereign democratic country governed by a written Constitution that guarantees essential rights to its citizens, including equality before law, freedom of expression, and the inviolable right to life and personal liberty. Over the years, the Parliament of Indravarsha has passed various forward-looking legislations to enhance women's rights and bridge gender inequalities. Despite this, deep-rooted societal norms such as patriarchy and stigma associated with women's reproductive autonomy continue to persist.

2. In 2024, the Indravarsha Parliament introduced a legislation titled the "Reproductive Health and Safety Act, 2024" (RHSA). The Act aimed to regulate access to Emergency Contraceptive Pills (ECPs), with the stated intent of promoting safe usage, preventing misuse, and safeguarding women's health. The RHSA contains the following significant provisions:

- Section 3: "No individual shall sell or supply emergency contraceptive pills unless a legitimate prescription has been issued by a certified medical practitioner."
- Section 4: "Pharmacies and registered medical outlets are required to maintain comprehensive records of all ECP prescriptions, including the purchaser's full name, age, and contact information."
- Section 5: "Any person found violating the provisions under Sections 3 or 4 shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding ₹5,000 or imprisonment up to one year, or both."

3. While the government justified the RHSA on the grounds of promoting "responsible contraceptive use," civil rights advocates, women's health activists, and legal scholars have raised serious concerns regarding its disproportionate impact on women, specifically on their ability to exercise reproductive autonomy without state interference.

4. In the city of Meghapur, a 28-year-old freelance writer named Anika Raghavan—well known for her bold opinion pieces on social justice and civil liberties—found herself caught in the very issue she had often reported on. After a consensual intimate encounter with her partner, Anika realized that they had not used protection. Cognizant of the situation and her options, she decided to obtain an emergency contraceptive pill to prevent an unplanned pregnancy.

5. Confident in her understanding of reproductive rights as exercised in many liberal democracies, Anika assumed she would be able to obtain the pill without much trouble. However, upon visiting a nearby pharmacy, she was shocked when the pharmacist refused to sell the pill without a doctor's prescription. Surprised, she questioned the requirement, only to be told bluntly that the RHSA 2024 prohibited the sale of ECPs without a valid medical prescription. The encounter, which took place in a busy store, drew unwelcome stares and murmurs, adding to her discomfort.

MOOT PROBLEM

6. Undeterred, Anika sought an appointment with a local gynecologist at a government-affiliated clinic. The waiting area was packed with patients, mostly accompanied by spouses or family members. When her turn finally arrived, Anika was subjected to uncomfortable and invasive questions. The male doctor inquired whether she was married, questioned her moral choices, and expressed disapproval over her request. Anika, though reluctant, provided her personal details—name, age, and mobile number—as required, knowing it would now be logged into an official register, thereby compromising her privacy.

7. Upon returning home, Anika reflected on the humiliation she had endured and the lack of dignity afforded to her during what should have been a confidential medical interaction. She believed the RHSA had, in effect, forced her to surrender her personal autonomy and right to make private medical decisions. Article 21 of the Constitution of Indravarsha guarantees the right to life and personal liberty, which the Supreme Court has previously interpreted to include the right to privacy and bodily autonomy. She saw the prescription requirement as a direct violation of these rights.

8. Furthermore, Anika believed that the RHSA discriminated on the basis of gender. Under Article 14, all citizens are entitled to equality before the law. While men could purchase condoms or other male contraceptives freely and anonymously, women seeking ECPs were compelled to undergo scrutiny, justify their actions, and reveal sensitive personal details. This unequal burden, she argued, reinforced outdated patriarchal standards and disproportionately targeted women.

9. Motivated to challenge the status quo, Anika authored a searing editorial titled "Her Choice, Not Their Control: Why RHSA Must Change". The piece went viral, sparking a wave of conversations and testimonials from women across Indravarsha who shared similar accounts of being denied access or shamed for seeking ECPs. Many recounted experiences of moral policing by healthcare professionals, privacy violations, and social stigma arising from the legal requirements under the RHSA.

10. Building on this momentum, Anika filed a writ petition before the Supreme Court of Indravarsha, challenging the constitutionality of Sections 3 and 4 of the Reproductive Health and Safety Act, 2024. The petition was admitted for hearing, drawing significant media coverage and public discourse.

11. In her petition, Anika made the following key contentions:

- That Sections 3 and 4 of the RHSA violate Article 21, which guarantees the right to privacy, bodily autonomy, and reproductive choice as integral components of personal liberty.
- That reproductive decisions, including the method and timing of contraception, must be recognized as a matter of individual informed choice, not subject to state regulation or oversight.

MOOT PROBLEM

- That the differential treatment of women—subjecting them to mandatory prescriptions and data collection for ECPs while allowing men unrestricted access to contraceptives—constitutes gender-based discrimination, violating the principle of equality under Article 14.
- That the law demeans the dignity of women and curtails their personal freedom by embedding societal prejudice into healthcare policy, thereby undermining both their self-respect and liberty.

12. The case, now titled Anika R. vs. Republic of Indravarsha, has become a landmark litigation testing the boundaries of state control over reproductive rights, gender equality in healthcare access, and the meaning of privacy in a modern constitutional framework.

13. The case of Anika R. vs. State of Indravarsha (2024) is currently pending before the Hon'ble Supreme Court of Indravarsha. The following issues have been framed for consideration:

Issues for Consideration:

1. Whether Sections 3 and 4 of the Reproductive Health and Safety Act, 2024, violate the petitioner's fundamental right to privacy and bodily autonomy as guaranteed under Article 21 of the Constitution of Indravarsha.
2. Whether the requirement of mandatory prescription and collection of personal information under Sections 3 and 4 of the RHSA, 2024, amounts to unreasonable and arbitrary state interference with a woman's right to make informed reproductive choices.
3. Whether the impugned provisions of the RHSA, 2024, result in gender-based discrimination and thereby violate the guarantee of equality under Article 14 of the Constitution.
4. Whether the RHSA, 2024, by mandating disclosure of personal details and subjecting unmarried women to moral scrutiny, infringes the constitutional right to dignity and personal liberty under Article 21.
